CHAPTER L. "I was taken sick a year ago With billous fever."

"My doctor pronounced me cured, but I got sick again, with terrible pains in my back and sides, and I got so bad I Could not move!

From 228 lbs. to 120! I had been doctoring for my liver, but it did me no good. I did not expect to live more than three months. I began to use Hop Bitters. Directly my appetite returned, my pains left me, my entire system seemed renewed as if by magic, and after several bottles, I am not only as sound as a sovereign but weigh more than I did before. To Hop Bitters I ove my life." R. FITZPATRICK. Dublin, June 6, '81.

"Don't say Deacon Gibbs to me," retorted the widow. "Don't I know what he's after? Don't he know as well as I do, that I've got eight thousand dollars put safe away in the Blutgrass Bank? I haven't a doubt he'd like to git the handlin of it, but he never will, I kin

"Oh no, you haint said, I know, but a body kin put two and tow together I reckin. Well, all I've got to say, I'd rather have Deacon Gibbs any day, if it was me, than that smooth-spoke, iley-lookin lawyer. But I must be a-gittin home; Bijah'll want his supper time it's ready," and Mrs. Hatch rolled up her knitting, wrapped it carefully in a cloth, and put on her black sun-bonnet and her blue yarn "half-hands."

"You might of stayed to supper. Jemima," said the widow, reproachfully. "I was a goin to have cream cookies an some of them Lawton blackberry preserves you're so fond ot."

"Wal, I'd like mighty well to stay.
Belindy, but Bijah, he'll be a-lookin fur me to hev supper ready when he comes in from the field. He's allus as hungry as a beaver at night; an I ain't left nothin cooked so he could get himself a bite. I reckin I better go. You go into Miss Larcom's quiltin next week?" "Oh, I s'pose so. Miss Larcom would get miffed if I didn't," and after another widow, fair, fat, and not quite forty, and was known as a best housekeeper in and around the neighborhood where she lived.

With even less personal attractions and good qualities than she possessed, she night have changed her widow's weeds for bridal attire long ago, had she so siesired. However, for some reasons best known to herself, she had preferred to remain a "lone woman," as she called it, so far. Whether she intended to remain so much longer was a question which puzzled herself quite as much as it did some other parties.

It was the day of Mrs. Larcom's quilting, and supper was almost ready. The widow placed a chair for her visitor, who sat down, looking more

It was the day of Mrs. Larcom's quilting, and supper was almost ready. The quilt was already out, and by a little preconcerted manoeuver on the part of the fun-loving girls, it had been thrown over the widow's head, when taken out of the frame—a piece of mischief which afforded no little amusement, as, according to time-honored tradition, whoever the quilt is first thrown over is seen to become a bride.

Mrs. Blossom bore her honors blush-ingly, and her cheeks were still covered with crimson, when the gentlemen be-gan to drop in, just before supper. Lawyer Greene, who was among the first to arrive, was profuse in his attentions to the blooming widow, much to the discomfiture of his less fortunate rival, who could only sit in the corner and cast despairing glances at the object of his affections.

"Just look at Deacon Gibbs," whisper-ed Mahala Williams to Dorcas Lamb. "He looks like a hen on a hot griddle, while Lawyer Greene is a-courting the

"Oh, you must stay to supper, deacon; it's a'most ready now, an I can't let you go before that," declared the hostess, determinedly. But the deacon was equally determined, and go he did.

"Deacon Gibbs! Deacon Gibbs! stop a minute, I want to speak to you," cried Mrs. Hatch, rushing out to the porch, where he stood, looking a little bewildered at the unexpected summons.

"I want to ask you to come over the "I want to ask you to come over the

"Wal, I dunno, Miss Hatch," said the deacon, uneasily. "I thank you kindly for the invite, but I've been a-feelin kind of blue for a good-spell now, an I don't know as I'd be fittin comp'ny to go an eat Thanksgivin dinners with folks when

"Sho! that's all nonsense, deacon.
You must come now, and I shill be a-lookin fur you." And good-hearted

If Mrs. Blossom neticed the deacon's departure, she betrayed no consciousdeparture, she betrayed no consciouselse of the fact, but demarely continued her fliritation with the lawyer.
Supper, the great event of the day,

The meal was well under way, and conversation had flagged considerably, for with hungry people eating and talking are not to be carried on together, when a new arrival came in the person of Hiram Primm, the store-keeper's clerk.

Hiram was soon seated at the table helping himself right and leit to the still abundant substantials and luxuries on the board.

"Heard the bank had broke. I couldn't help thinking what a narrow escape I'd had."

Deacon Gibbs had no reason to quarrel with his wife for keeping the secret, since it had saved her from fils rival. And Mrs. Deacon Gibbs has never regretted the occurrence which decided her fate.

And for the laws a bin of the laws

Jemima paid the promised visit bright and early the next morning. She found her sister looking pale and dejected.

"How bad is it, Belindy?" she asked.
"Did you put all your money in the bank?"

"All-every cent of it," groaned the

"Wal, it is too bad, but never mind; you don't have to give up the house right away, do you?"
"No; not till March."
"So much the better, then; though, of course, you could have a home with us, right away. But there's your cows, an chickens, and such things. They'll bring a better price after you've winter-was rewarded by a discovery.

"That's the deacon's shay, now," she cried, "an Belindy not here. Dear me, I wonder if she ain't a comin, at all? I've a notion to send Bijah over to see."

Then she took another look.

"There's somebody with him—why, if it ain't Belindy herself! I'm so glad. They'll make a match yet, I jest do believe;" and she ran to open the front door.
